

It is in participation in activities and association with others that a person learns his capabilities concerning himself in relation with those around him.

Every day on campus something is learned about people; therefore, something is learned about life. Learning to live and get along with others is a predominate factor in forming an individual's pattern. His accomplishments in this area-- including understanding and compatibility of others -- will determine his role in life and enjoyment of it.