

Graffiti (the strive to be remembered)

As one looks at the desks around school, he is apt to find artwork left by previous occupants, whose mark in life is a big '84, "Tanzan loves Jane" or "We were meant 2 be 2 gether 4 ever."

Once in a while, though, one may find a really good poem, or a series of "notes" left by someone who cares about what he writes. Sometimes one may even find a fabulous caricature of a favorite teacher, often accompanied by a caption which is befitting.

There are several types of graffiti but the one which is most outstanding is the elaborate engraving on desk tops. This type of graffiti is used by those who are into self-preservation measures. They want their work to be read and admired by future occupants of his favorite desk. This type of graffiti is also frowned upon since it cannot be removed.

Because there is so much graffiti and so many participants, it has been suggested that a course be set up to teach the fine aspects of defacing school property, ending with a contest provided all participants had not already been suspended for perfecting their entries.
