

Class of 1988: A Winning Team

Lori Atkerson believes that where she lays her head isn't as important as just being with her friends at the beach.

The Seniors of Richard Winn Academy are winners! Almost everyone has set goals for the future, and we all are determined to meet them; but, more importantly, we have developed winning friendships that will last a lifetime.

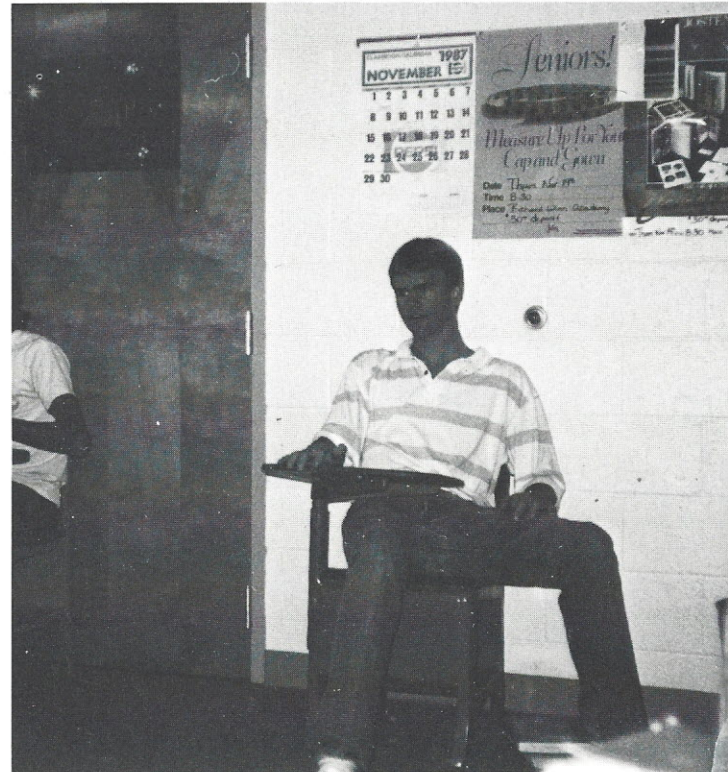

Most of us have seen Richard Winn rise to the great institution that it is today. We all shared tears when we saw it fall in the 1984 tornado. We all thought, "I was there just four hours ago." Sharing the sad times and the fun times at Camp La Vida and the Old Armory made us closer. I guess in a way the tornado was good for us because that's when we became the close family of friends we are today.

We have some great memories of our years here- our dreams, our schemes, our plans, and our secrets. We have definitely made our mark on Richard Winn. No matter how smart, how athletic, or how rebellious we all may be, we are very glad to be the class with character, and we will cherish our memories. Our achieving may not all be trophies and awards, but our own individual qualities and friendships make us winners.

Getting to leave school for lunch is a Senior privilege that Mack Johnson makes the most of. As long as they keep their grades up, the Seniors have thirty minutes to make a quick trip for fast food.

Joe Bierer realizes that he has gone over his safe debt load, and he wonders what he is going to give up to meet his budget. Calculating a safe debt load is one of the principles that Seniors learn in Economics, a class all Seniors are required to take.
