

Where, oh where, has my money gone

During the first three years of high school, a student usually has a small amount of pocket change, but when he becomes a Senior money seems to vanish before his eyes. Everywhere someone is standing around looking for a way to take the Senior's money.

For instance, in order to reserve a dorm room at college, one must fork out $200 or more six to eight months in advance. A Senior also has to purchase a cap, gown, and invitations for graduation. Of course, that's all understandable but many companies play on the Senior's sentimentality by tempting him with all sorts of other graduation paraphernalia such as memory books, key chains, mugs, and jewelry which the Senior finds hard to turn down.

It's no wonder, then, that the Seniors are always singing, "Where, oh where, has my money gone?"

by Kay Gustafson

Marilyn Bagley, Aimee Price, and Kay Gustafson, take a break after touring Biltmore House.

Deciding what college to attend is a tough. Brian Clyburn and Gina Robinson use their free time to see what majors Furman offers.

