

RWA students wear it well

This year, accessories played a big role in the fashion scene with many different styles, shapes, and colors. Eye-catching ribbons, bows, and barretts were often used to accent girls' hair while moon watches and watches with leather bands completed the fashion look for both sexes.

Fashionable clothes also drew attention. Girls were seen in baggy, over-sized sweaters, turtle-necks, knit pants or acid-washed jeans. Mini-skirts with white Keds were popular while skirts and blouses worn with scarves accounted for a dresser look.

Boys also sported the baggy pants and acid-washed jeans, but occasionally wore Bugle Boys with sweaters and turtle-necks to keep right in style. Letter, flight, and denim jackets remained popular and a few of the younger boys went for the crew-cut to complete the fifties look.

No matter how RWA students chose to dress, they wore their fashions well.

Sporting stylish leather or suede fight jackets, Elizabeth Elledge, Laurie McLean, Freddie Glenn, Chris Bass, and Michele Davis get together on the playground to demonstrate the jacket's warmth on a cold day.

Gordon Weigle has the time to display many different types of watches popular with Middle School students this year.

A familiar look at RWA this year was the turtle-neck worn under a sweater as Brad Douglas, Ann Marie Burley, Miriam Peay, and Bill Dove demonstrate on a typical winter's day at school.
