

1994 MISS RWA — GINI STARTSMAN

How would you measure a successful life?

"Every minute of life on this earth is important. Too often we waste precious time chasing worldly ideas of success. I feel that one must focus on his inner spirit and search within for answers. Each of us is different and each has his own particular talents. In order to have a successful life, I believe that we must develop these talents and then use them to make this a better world.

We are all God's children and that relationship brings obligations. It is important that we treat others, whoever they may be, as we want to be treated. Being sensitive to their needs and reaching out in compassion to them is the first step toward successful living.

There are endless ways that one can use his talents to serve mankind. A person can become successful when he makes his own special contribution to the world. For we are all a part of God's plan here on earth and together we must work to help one another. Therefore, I believe . . . that the gift of oneself is true measure of a successful life."

