

Seventh Graders Explore the Nation's Capital

FUCKER-UP TIME. Jeni-Bruce Wilkes is somewhat embarrassed about the situation as Senator Thurmond prepares to give her a little kiss. The Senator took time out of his busy schedule to greet each member of the group.

WE'RE POOPED! These chaperones, along with Kyle Byrd and Robbie Huey, use the spare time to relax from the long day of sightseeing. You can bet they were glad to fall into a comfortable bed back at the hotel that night.

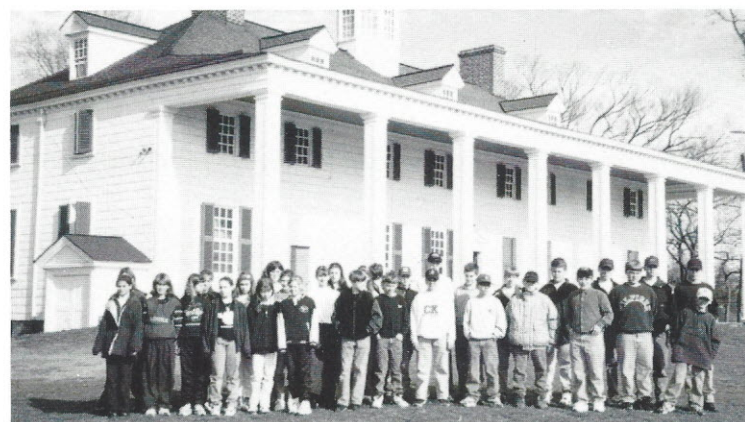

ABOUT FACE ... Brittany Foster sneaks a peek up at the stoic soldier directing the wreath-laying ceremony. Brittany, Josh Allen, Cleve Langdale, and Michelle Maddox had the honor of participating in this sacred service.

PROUD TO BE AN AMERICAN. Despite the cold temperatures, the seventh graders take a Kodak moment in front of the Iwo Jima Memorial. This was just one of the many impressive memorials they visited in Washington.

ONE MORE PICTURE. One of the most interesting days of the trip was spent touring George Washington's home, Mount Vernon, and its grounds. The huge estate gave them a good idea of the early life and times of our country.
