

ACT I

From the time the doors opened last August, change was ever-present. Most noticeably, students experienced a change in what they wore to school with the implementation of a new dress code. For the first time, classes were scheduled in trimesters. When students walked into school for the first day of classes, a new headmaster was waiting to shake their hands. With so many new changes this year, the only thing that remained constant was change itself. The pieces of the past were tossed into the air to make way for a new Richard Winn, and the fall trimester was a time when everything seemed to be...
