

Freedom. The essence of every kid's being. The reason we want to grow up. And then we get the chance to taste a little bit of the future. Our medicine? Summertime. The time when we finally we get to sleep... the time when we want to be outside... the time when we become a little kid again. When one thinks summer, one hears an ocean wave crashing, a splash in the pool, or the feel of sand under feet. This summer Richard Winn students were never lacking in things to do. We went to camp; we had summer practices; we picked up seashells. This summer we made new friends and hung out with the old ones, too. We tasted freedom on our tongues and enjoyed every bit of it. We thought, "Now this is what summer is about."
