The drive? The sweet taste of victory. Richard Winn's athletes spend their summer break in workouts- hours spent in practice and in the weight room. Their commitment shows its worth by the time the seasons roll around. Richard Winn thrives on athletics (and, of course, academics), but athletics are the fun-filled, action-packed escape that we Richard Winn-ians crave. The year 2012 brought about an abundance of excitement. It began with a growing football team, a spunky, enthusiastic cheerleading squad, and a vivacious, experienced volleyball team in the fall. As the fall froze into winter, we watched a young, but driven, team scrap their way to the first appearance in a girl's basketball state championship since 1994. We were also spectators of the B-team and middle school basketball teams, where we bore witness to Richard Winn's future stars, the talent, and the potential for many more state championships. When spring finally sprung, we sat out in the warm (and sometimes not so warm) breezes to watch America's pastime, baseball. We were then stunned by the spunky scrappiness of the JV softball team, who carried an undefeated record throughout the majority of their schedule. At the close of the school year, some put away their pads, cleats, shoes, ankle braces, knee pads, and mitts for the last time...others began practicing for yet another season. It's been said in a nice, little, catchy phrase that we have a WINning tradition. We have a drive. We crave victory. We won't settle for mediocrity. We work, we improve, improve, and improve until we attain it. Victory. Richard Winn athletics, just getting it done...
