

Back on Track. With schedule and handbook in hand, Vincent leads the pack down the Richard Winn halls. Open house has always been a great time for parents and students to meet new teachers.

Looking Back and Moving On. Anna Cooke and Vlcky Durham step into Mrs. Wilder's classroom during Open House to glance at last year's yearbook and to discuss schedules. During Open House this year, students were able to pick up their yearbooks and, like always, get their schedules to see what classes they were assigned.

It only [gets] Better

Open house is the final reminder that it is almost time to retire shorts and flip-flops. It reminds students, parents, and teachers alike that it is time to drag uniform clothes out of the depths of closets and to prepare classrooms. Open House is a time to meet new teachers, catch up with friends that have been MIA all summer, and to prepare for the start of a new year.

Get Down to Business. Landon Caulder, the Caulder clan, and Caroline Poole visit their new second grade classroom. For the lower school students, Open House was a great opportunity to step into the class and get a sneak preview of the new school year.

Early-Bird Gets the Worm. Kyle Savage and his dad realize the importance of pre-ordering the 2013 yearbook. Many parents took advantage of the Early-Bird special pricing at the Corporation Meeting.

Last Strains of Freedom. Riley Simpson smiles big for the camera on her last few days of summer. She took Open House as chance to wear something other than uniform attire while walking the Richard Winn halls.

Here's a Sneak Peek. Marshall Gibbons and Joey Sanchez fill out papers for Ms. Cooper's fourth grade class. Ms. Cooper, a new addition to RWA, was eager to get her students on the learning track.

Brace Yourself. Samantha Wilkes and family take a look at all of the spirit wear items for sale. Parents kept the checkbooks open as they made their way through all the stations set up.
