

The Richard Winn football team came away with a new outlook on the program after the conclusion of the 2012 season. After a majority of their summer was spent practicing and training for the upcoming Friday nights, these young men found themselves staying in contention to win most of the games they played. Having to adjust to a new style of play, eight-man football, it took the Eagles a few games to get comfortable with all the new changes. The Eagles also faced constant injuries to key players but managed to still put up a fight every game. After a season full of learning experiences, the returning players will be eager to get back out on Ruff Field and prove themselves once more.

Boys of [fall]

Criss-Cross. Matt Taylor cuts back across field to avoid being tackled. Matt had plenty of runs this year for a lot of yardage, with a few even resulting in touchdowns.

Final Stand. All five senior players were elected team captains before kickoff of their final game as Richard Winn Eagles.

Standing Guard. Junior Alex Scott plants his foot to block a Clarendon Hall defender. Alex was a key lineman when it came to guarding our quarterback.

Catch Him If You Can. Hunter Gibbons advances the ball down field against Carolina Academy. He always managed to find open field to gain positive yardage for the team every chance he had.

What was the best part about being able to play eight-man football this year?

The best part about playing eight-man this year was that almost every game we played was close in score and exciting.

-Reid Johnson, 12th Grade

The pace of play was continuously moving and everything was more up-tempo than last year's eleven man football games.
