

"All we have to decide is what to do with the time that is given us."

- J.R.R. Tolkien

For students, it is the general consensus that their whole entire lives are spent at school, and at some point or another, everyone feels this way. They feel they are spending so much of their time in a desk, learning confusing math equations or reading poems, but the truth is, classes are not as bad as they seem and also, not the only things remembered from school. We remember the times spent with friends at recess or at sporting events, the memories made on the weekends with classmates or the lunches used for weird conversations. The point is, don't spend time dreading school work. Learn from classes and teachers, make memories, and more importantly, make lifelong friends. Here's to a school year with plenty of stories that begin with an animated...

This One Time