

CLASS PROPHECY

Jerry Douglas and Jayne Stevenson are busy working on the 1984 World's Fair which will be held in that other city of light, Winnsboro, South Carolina.

Beverly Brown, Melba Cail, Juanita Davis, and Barbara Miles are telephone operators for the Bell Telephone Company. They run their own business on the side, which they call, "The Bell and Tell."

Millie Pope and Brenda Rabon are owners of the only florist shop in the United States which sells man-eating water lillies and mummified mums.

Lynda Davis, Leona DeHart, and Beverly Freeman have devised a serum which if injected into a chicken makes deviled, scrambled, and poached eggs. They thought this up while driving through Winnsboro's dense traffic on a Saturday afternoon with their eyes closed.

Craig Hinrichs, Patricia Dove, and Nancy Blair, after receiving their education, are now working with the Peace Corp in Nova Scotia.

Darnell Branham and Patricia Groomes recently laid claim on another trophy for their tenth consecutive win of the Ladies' Hand Ball Tournament in Sandusky, Georgia.

Frank Martin, a distinguished Senator, could not make it to our reunion because he is filibustering against the new idea of women presidents, which is a petition being pressed hard by Stella Boulware, Billie Faye Branham, and Josephine Beckham who are all likely candidates for the new office.

As the smoke clears, we recognize first, second, and third-place winners of last year's Darlington-500 race. First was Fearless Faile, alias Bobby Faile, driving his fender-flopper Ford—second was Carburator Chapman, alias, Toby Chapman, flying in his canary-yellow Chevy; and last, but not least, placing third, was Catch-up Kennedy, alias William Kennedy, in his pepped-up Plymouth.

Dwight Cooper, Richard Adams, and Johnny Glisson are joint-owners of the hottest restaurant on the Chattahoochee Beach.

Ann Wiles, Jolene Mattox, and Carlie Ann Lyles are doing secretarial work for one of the largest law firms in New York headed by Vicki Boulware and Harold Baker.

Larry Jo Douglas, who has just completed his term at Wofford, feels that he is too old to go into a special field of work so he has retired. Despite this—while at Wofford, Larry Jo achieved an unforgettable scholastic average.

Alex Boulware, Gary Branham, John Powell, and Louis Fuller are now stationed at the Marine Base in Norfolk, Va. and specialize in guerilla warfare.

Linda Farrow and Fitz Dove are still digging ditches around Erskine College in Due West.

We have also learned that David Cooper is now writing a new style of poetry for that popular magazine, MR. ATLAS featuring Thomas Broome and his short stories.

Larry Parker, Donald Smith, and Jennings Crouch are co-owners of the largest canning company since Del Monte. They call their can company P.S.C. (pluckem, shuckem, and cannom) which is now located in the Valley of the Jolly Green Giant formerly known as Possum Hollow.

Wade Macfie, now President of the Kleenex Tissue Company, is seen talking to Joe Sanders, who is the largest stockholder in the Sanders Sweet Shop.

Annette Cogdill and Sally Martin were just seen walking up with their brand-new 1984 Collapsible convertibles in their pocket-books. Their husbands, Haskle Smith and Donnie Coleman, receive the credit for these marvelous autos.

Lillian Bass and Wayne Wilson, we're happy to say, have established a chain of B&W Drive-Ins which stretch all the way from Ridgeway to Winnsboro.

We also hear that Captain Bill Wilkes of the Merchant Marines has recently been shipped to Japan where he is living up to his nickname "Jap".

Ellen McMaster and Anne Henderson are chairmen of that national organization, the Quill and Scroll, which consists of those who have excelled in the field of journalism and who also show leadership and good citizenship.

Charles Mincey and Brenda Lutz are partners in a dancing school specializing in the new dances—the Siberian Slouch, the Doodling and the Pinch. Cecil Tanner, the famous chiropractor, takes care of the injured students in his office, which is next door to their studio.

Mary McMeekin, Shirley McFadden, and Frances Kay Mitchell are librarians at the Library of Congress in Washington.

Sue Fortune, Janet Fellers, and Judy Wilkes are living in Winnsboro and are teaching physical education at Winnsboro High School under the direction of Ricky Thomas who is head coach.

Shirley Bennett is the greatest movie star since Greta Garbo and has recently made a new picture portraying the life of the great chemist, Sandy Strange.

Francis Brewington and Nancy Nunn are now living in Twin Pines, N.C. where Francis is a nurse and Nancy is a basketball coach.

Rusty Robinson is now practicing dentistry in Greenbrier which is only one of his many offices.

Carol Ann McLendon will be a little late tonight while on her way over she wrecked her van and had to take a taxi.

We see Marsha Hackle down by the duck pond demonstrating her Hackle Tackle on all the fish while talking to Berkeley Palmer, who has been noted for his bravery in action and his loyalty to the cause while serving as an active member of the Foreign Legion.

Joyce Brazier, Barbara Drew, and Betty Smith are celebrating their fifteenth year as owners of large chain of supermarkets which are financially managed by Richard Johnson.

Jennye Littleton, Mary Pat Nichols, and Patsy Short are working for The Bass and Thomas Typewriter Company. Jennye, Mary Pat, and Patsy can fix just about anything no matter what's wrong with it.

Ben Branham and Bill Heron are operating one of the gigantic money-making machines in Washington at the Mint and seem to be very happy with their work.

Patricia Branham is now the owner of a jewelry store in Columbia called Branham's Bracelet Shop.

Erwin Renwick and Kitty Powers are now working at Disneyland where they are responsible for the odd sounds and special effects in the world of fantasy.

Elizabeth Douglas is one of the few women left in politics but has made definite plans to change that after she becomes the First Lady or President.

Byrd Larsen is now living in Philadelphia where she is teaching ballet. Byrd has just recently invented several new steps such as doing a jump on your hands and not on your toes under water with the aid of assistant. This assistant is none other than Sam Edenfield, better known as "Snorkle Sam." She has two outstanding members of her (troupe) Brenda Humphries and Tommy Peake who gave an outstanding performance in ballet this spring entitled "The Dying Hummingbirds."

But the night wears on and we realize that we must return to the present. Tomorrow, we will wonder how much of what we heard was fact or fantasy. How about it?
