

A couple of minor corrections to what I said earlier:

Dave Jenkins's old store lies just west of the Stone Place, not south as I said.

On the connection between Wrights and Bolins:

I reversed my great grandmother's name. It should be Elizabeth Jenkins Bolin. It was probably obvious that this was an error. But I am an perfectionist by nature and just can't let such things pass without correcting them.

do you have any idea if the WRIGHTs in Fairfield Co SC were related to the ones in Chester County
.... a WRIGHT researcher told me one time she had 4 WRIGHT lines in the Union / Chester County area.

Those I know about in the SW part of Chester County came down from Va there is a weblink on them which I have not looked at in a long time. I believe mine are related to these.

Thanks for the email and good luck on finding the cemetery.

The Wright burying ground I am looking for is attested in my mother's records as being about a mile west of Liberty Universalist Church which is about a mile south of where the Shelton Road dead ends into Hwy 215. An ancestor of ours, Uriah Wright, about whom a colorful story was written in Edrington's History of Fairfield County, is said to be buried there probably with some of his family. His father was Bolling Wright, a revolutionary soldier and probably the ancestor through whom momma established her membership in the D.A.R. No one seems to know exactly where it is now. I have tried three or four times to find it without success. It lies probably in deep woods.

Pelham, as I said on the phone, a mile strictly west of Liberty Church is closer to the Shelton Rd. than Hwy 215. It probably made sense that Old Wright's homestead was near a road. Could you perhaps look at Fairfield County maps in your possession, one of which I gave you, for the period between 1800-1860, which is when Uriah Wright lived, to see where the road ran that would be a mile west of Liberty Church? Can you determine whether the old road was in the same approximate spot as the present-day Shelton Road? Since those old maps often showed who lived where, and since Old Wright was a leading citizen of Feasterville in his time, perhaps an old map shows the location of his homestead.

As Henrietta Rosson Martin indicates the burying ground in question was more in the direction of the Faucette home than strictly west, this means I would have to look over hundreds of acres of woods. This could take weeks of full-time searching. It would really help if I could narrow this down to a smaller area.

I have WRIGHTs yes yes

but there is more than one family in Chester county and I can't prove the parents of my great great grandfather Mayberry Wright

I will give his children at the bottom of this email.

I feel he was closely kin to a John Wright Sr in the SW part of Chester county and probably all these Wrights are buried in the same Burying Ground.

This Wright Burying ground I am looking for is

1 1/2 miles SW of the Dr. Isaiah Mobley farm ... in Chester County this is abt 4 to 5 miles S of Woodward Baptist Church on Ashford Rd.

just as you pass Douglas School Rd.

I found out that part of the Mobely farm was later purchased by my grandfather O'Donnell in 1908 his farm was at the S corner of Douglas School Rd and Ashford Rd his farm was behind the location of the present day Woodard Church Parsonage.

Therefore, I think this burying ground that I am looking for is about 1 1/2 SW of the above described location.

Mobley Creek runs thru this farm.

Here are my WRIGHTs.

The Children of Sarah Colvin and Mayberry Wright are below:

Elizabeth M Wright md Thomas O'Donnell these are my gtgdparents both buried in the Wright Burying Ground. . . . along with some of the others.

I just spoke with Steve White whose mother Mrs. Odell Boulware, deceased, was a genealogist and local historian for that area of the counties. He said he knows there is a mention of the original site of Beaver Creek and will search in his collection. He may have passed a collection of her research on to Linda Malone in the genealogy room and will check there for us as I can't get away from the museum to do that--and Linda is not friendly to me. I am copying this to Steve's email address so that he can join in on the conversation. He is out looking for a Wright burial ground today that is supposed to be about a mile west, possibly North, of Liberty Universalist Church at Feasterville. Didn't you say you have Wrights in your line, or was that someone else on the Chester GenForum?

Pelham private email

I had posted on the Chester list that Dave Jenkins Rd was in Chester County I was in error, but will not repost in detail unless someone else mentions it.

I was looking at the map on google and got confused since it was not showing a county line at the time.

Now the 'headwaters of Beaver Creek' is just S of Dave Jenkins Rd where it intersects with Ashford Ferry Rd.

This would have had to be near where the old or first Beaver Creek Baptist church was located.

Don't you think?
