The program is operated by the Fairfield County Job Service office.

Al Jones, Job Service area

Al Jones, Job Service area director, said 33 students were hired for summer work last year, adding that the town of Winnsboro and Fairfield County were two of the biggest supporters of the program.

Danny Miller, town councilman

Drug-Free Schools program, said the town hired 19 students last year, and is hoping to use between 20 and 25 this summer.

Town jobs would include clerical help in Town Hall and the

and director of the Safe and ical help in Town Hall and the public safety department, as well as work at the water and wastewater treatment plants and sanitation department, Miller said.

Last summer, the county "tool funding and created half-day jobs," where two students would split the duties of the work day according to Witherspoon.

program was very successful las summer, and "it's something we would like to continue."

Witherspoon said the program gave youths "a feeling for wha government is all about, and helped them understand the system."

He said some students worked in the finance department, while others performed clerical duties Others worked in the courthouse in the tax assessor's office, and two students worked with the animal shelter.

Witherspoon said the program had an added advantage: when
