JAMES BROWN

NATIVE OF FIFSHIRE, SCOTLAND

James Brown was born in Fifeshire, Scotland in June of 1740. He died in Fairfield County, South Carolina on March 14, 1821. This information was obtained from the Fairfield Cemetery books and also from a visit to the old abandoned Molly Alston Cemetery in Fairfield County. Buried next to James is the grave of his wife Janet. She was born December 6, 1748 in Scotland, and died in Fairfield County May 30, 1830. We have been researching the parents of James and Janet but have not located any paperwork as to their identity. The large flat tombstones of James and Janet are broken in several pieces and have deteriorated over the years in a cemetery that has been forgotten over time. It is very sad that the memories of the Brown family, and the Alston family, who were some of the original immigrants to Fairfield, have now been covered with vines and debris in a cemetery that does not even have a sign marking where our ancestors are buried.

From the research that has been found on James Brown, we believe that he was one of the passengers on the voyage with the Reverend William Martin in 1772 that sailed to South Carolina from Ireland. Many Scots left their homeland to go to Ireland due to the religious persecutions they faced. There were five shiploads of settlers that came to America on this voyage. The passenger manifest of the ship Lord Dunluce lists James Brown as one of the passengers. The ship sailed from the port of Larne, Ireland on October 4, 1772 and arrived in Charleston, SC on December 20, 1772. (Ref: Scotch-Irish Migration to South Carolina, 1772).

Each head of household was given 100 acres of land. Other members were given 50 acres each. On January 6, 1773, James was given 350 acres of land in what was then part Newberry County. This 350 acres suggests that James being given 100 acres and his wife Janet given 50 acres that there were four other members of the household. These other family members we presume were their children. It was not unusual for these land grants to be traded among the new settlers. Many wanted to be closer to other family members. James also owned land in Fairfield and Kershaw Counties, which he left to his children in his will

From his estate papers filed in Fairfield County, James was very prosperous. He owned several acres of land, many head of livestock, slaves, and a large amount of household goods. The lands that he left to his children were referred to as "plantations".

James and Janet Brown's family consisted of eight children. The identity of the children we found mentioned in his will. One son named John, and his wife Jane, had fourteen children. These were listed in his will when John died in 1842. Jane died before this time. She is mentioned in his will as deceased. One son was named John Washington Brown who was born in 1815.

John Washington married Susan Wallace before 1843. She was also born in South Carolina in 1815. John and Susan migrated to Paulding County, Georgia between 1853 and 1860. John and Susan are listed on the 1850 Chester County Census. Chester and Fairfield County are bordering counties. From the research we have done, we believe John and Susan lived on the county line. It was not unusual to be listed in the wrong county if you were located on the county line. The census taker who came to your home first listed you on his census sheets. Also some families have been listed on more than one census for the same year. On the 1850 census it lists a daughter with the initial "E" age 11 with having attended school. It seems like this young lady is a mystery to the Brown family. We have a strong feeling her name is Elizabeth due to the many family members with that name. Family members have all said they never remembered anyone speaking about her. "E" could have died between 1850 and when the family migrated to Georgia. Or she could have remained behind with other family members and married. One day we hope to find this missing member of the Brown family.

After leaving their homeland in South Carolina, John and Susan settled into life in Paulding County. Unfortunately in 1862, Susan, her daughter Martha, and son Cornelius died of tuberculosis. They are buried in the Old Harmony Grove Cemetery. This left John with four children to raise.

In 1863 John married Loduskey Ann Tidwell, daughter of Indian Tidwell, a Cherokee Indian, and Lucretia Thompson. This union brought seven children into the Brown family. Due to her Indian heritage, Loduskey was given land in the Oklahoma Indian Territory. John, Loduskey and the younger children left Paulding County in the early 1880's to move to Oklahoma and their new home. John died about 1886 and Loduskey died in 1903. Both are buried in Stillwell, Adair County, Oklahoma.

These strong Brown roots have come from Scotland, to South Carolina, to Georgia and to Oklahoma. These Brown descendants are located in many other states across the nation. We can all thank our forefather, JAMES BROWN, for having a dream of a better life for his family and the courage to make that dream come true.
