Henry Colburn Solomon.

It being no gift of passion,
It breathes no tone of love
But the freshness and the purity
Of a jubilee far above.

It comes to thee as the fairy art
As one within whose heart
Earth had no stains of vanity
And selfishness in part.

O, save to one familiar friend
Thy heart's best secret should reveal
The faiths thou wert all unshaken
The virtues thou wert unrepentant
The purity thou wert unswerving
The homage thou wert unobscured
The light as some star
Whose steady radiance changes not
Through the thousands of years
Henry C. C.

Thou art now in thy morning - and thy gentle
Speaks in the raptur'd blood that rides thy pulse,
And glows its summer on thy cheek & brow.
Young light is in thy eye, and on thy cheek,
Thy days are but the dawning of our hope
And thy nights full of beauty: But time
Shall turn resolve of our warm'd dream
Well awake thy lips with passages of grief
And deal thy portion to the

Thou art

Henry Colburn Soliman.

O being no gift of passion,
O breathe no tone of love
But the freshness and the purity
Of a jubilee far above.
O love to turn to the fair girl
Whose smile within whose heart
Earth had no stain of vanity
And selfishness no part.

O, save to one familiar friend
Whose heart its veil should wear
The faithless bow be all unheeded
When gathering waters there;
Kiss in the morning of the dawn
As lightly as some bird
Whose steady radiance changes not
Through thousands of hearts of men.
Henry C. S.

Thou art now in the morning - and thy gentle
Speaks in the leaping blood that rides thy pulse,
And plants its summer on thy cheek & brow.
Young light is in thy eye, and on thy heart;
Thy days are but the dawning of our hopes
And thy nights full of beauty: But time
That stern revolver of our warmest dreams
Will overtake thy life with passages of grey
And deal thy portion to the
Thou art
