Personally appeared before me, J. F. Isenhower, who being duly sworn says: That he was intimately acquainted with D. P. Hamiter and that the above named D. P. Hamiter has often told him that he was too young at the beginning of the Civil War to enter the service. That about the beginning of 1863 he volunteered as a boy, that he was accepted and detailed to perform guard duty at what was then known as Shields Foundry and Machine Shop, which was then engaged in the manufacture of arms and machinery for the Confederate Army. That he remained at this post until Sherman's Army captured Columbia. That the men who did patrol duty with him are all dead.
