More Cheese Coming

The Fairfield County Department of Social Services is planning to distribute more cheese to those who meet income guidelines. The distribution will take place the last part of May or the first part of June. Distribution will be done through the churches of the county. Every church in the county is urged by D.S.S. to appoint a representative to identify needy persons in the congregation and contact Rufus Timms at 635-5502.

S.C., 171-weekly Edition, May 12, 1883.

MARRIED—There was a very pleasant gathering at the residence

Unique

the history of the Ralph Jones family was traced, including visits to the family homesite and graveyards. Ralph Jones was a Baptist minister who settled in the Simpson area in the late 1700's. The class traces his lineage from the 1750's to the 1880's, when the family moved from the area.

Why the history of this particular family?

"We traced his descendants because work on his family had not been done before and there was a good amount of physical evidence and written records were still available," said Pelham.

She looks forward to next year, when, hopefully, the grant that made this year's activities possible will be extended. By then, a survey of the county's architectural treasures done by Nancy Fox of the Central Midlands Regional Planning Council will be completed. The survey should yield some very interesting items, according to Pelham.

"There are a lot of log cabins around here. A lot of pioneer structures," she said, adding that her students have already explored some similar structures.

She said she hopes to emphasize illustration next year, although her students did a good bit this year.

She said the school system administration has been very supportive.

"They liked this idea," she said. "They respect the humanities and want to improve the school system and are really gung-ho about it."

Pelham looks forward to next year, when her classes can take up where they left off. If things go well, not only will her class be "published," but will learn even more about their heritage.
