

Melrose and its Builder

By KATHLEEN LEWIS

"MELROSE," the house which

Nicholas Adamson, Peay, 72 men in the country. He was one of built over a century ago, in 1785, stands and cost of eight in planters, left money crop, "richness and beauty." At his birth, February 3, 1811, he was more than half a mile up from him. The wealthy planter; he was also a soldier. Just a few years completed, was one of few of from his father as the only son fore his marriage to Martha Cary Lamar of Edinfield in January 1840, he had served in the Seminole War (1835), acquiring the title of Colonel.

After their marriage, the Colonels moved to the Flint Hill plantation in the Long Flint Hill plantation in the Long section while "Melrose" was being constructed. With his inheritance from his father, he had settled at Camden, acquired large holdings of lands, Negroes and horses after his retirement from the railroad, "In Fairfield." In "Fairfield," "Nick" Peay built his house when plantation life was at the zenith, in the early 1800's. Like ability, Nicholas added to his wealth, acquiring several plantations, each of which was destined for a particular name. All had comfortable homes for politically, economically and socially. However, the lavish life enjoyed on the Peay plantation, Flint Hill, was on a grander and grander scale than on the majority of others. His ownership of over 2,000 slaves and 3,000 acres—stretching from Fairfield County to Camden—placed him in the position of being the wealthiest man in cotton gin—and in the 1850's the plantation house was at the father, by birth and business, and laid waste all of "Melrose," because observers felt it was foolish to build such a sizeable house and especially one so far from the railroad.

But the young bride was thrilled over the plantation home as she watched the bridge, Italian shoemaker who provided shoes from "expans length." A task which Mrs. Peay loved to do some years before the Army of Sherman devastated "Melrose," of course, had been the point which Colonel Peay had dispensed his famous hospitality to the country side. Mrs. Peay was termed an excellent hostess who welcomed excellent hostesses who welcomed guests for "indefinite stays."

She, no doubt, worked hard, as she supervised the one hundred dirty house and yard servants and looked after their well-being. Because there were so many, no one slave worked unduly. For instance, one servant held only one job, that of opening and closing the windows; another as the fly brush boy.

The butler was an ancient, white-haired man who had served the "general" before, called "Dandy George." Next to the master and mistress, he was in charge. His manners were founded upon those of the aristocracy and best society, and were best discernible upon his greeting of guests at the door. As privilege, he always reserved for himself. He also trained the younger Negroes as they grew up to take their places; and taught table etiquette to the Peay children.

"Mamum Nannie," his wife, was born to come to her with their problems and rested them in her confidence. Under "Dandy George" and "Mamum Nannie" were the individual body servants and maids for the members of the family.

Each of the boys was allowed his own dog and horse; and was taught riding by the coachman weekly prayer meeting, led by the main duty was to drive the ladies. Under the Coachman, they recited bits of Scripture tutor-mistress had taught them, and sang "her" hymns, ending with their own special music, much of which was haunting African refrains.

Much of her name Mrs. Peay perhaps saw rather infrequently, because "Melrose" contained three houses and a large garden. The house was more than a fourth of an acre. But the ladies were well wrapped in lap robes to prevent their catching cold, and helped them alight from the carriage by placing a footstool for their convenience. On long journeys, outsiders packed along to repair broken harnesses, spokes, tires or the like.

Nearby the stables—said to have been fine and comfortable as modern brick homes—was the laundry, house where clothes were washed and ironed.

This building stood, until it was demolished to make way for the new entrance. The colonial entrance was flanked by large, upper bed chambers. The back hall was divisible from the front Colored had been dead for eight years—since February 26, 1857.

Embracing the front of "Melrose" was a two-story portico which was supported by large white columns. The colonial entrance was flanked by large, upper bed chambers. The back hall was divisible from the front Colored had been dead for eight years—since February 26, 1857.

Spunners and weavers worked the year round to keep the plantation clothed, as did the shoemakers who provided shoes from "expans length."

A task which Mrs. Peay loved

to do some years before

it had been known as "Peay's Folly," because observers felt it was foolish to build such a sizeable house and especially one so far from the railroad.

But the young bride was thrilled over the plantation home as she watched the bridge, Italian shoemaker who provided shoes from "expans length."

A task which Mrs. Peay loved

to do some years before

it had been known as "Peay's Folly," because observers felt it was foolish to build such a sizeable house and especially one so far from the railroad.

But the young bride was thrilled over the plantation home as she watched the bridge, Italian shoemaker who provided shoes from "expans length."

A task which Mrs. Peay loved

to do some years before

it had been known as "Peay's Folly," because observers felt it was foolish to build such a sizeable house and especially one so far from the railroad.

But the young bride was thrilled over the plantation home as she watched the bridge, Italian shoemaker who provided shoes from "expans length."

A task which Mrs. Peay loved

to do some years before

it had been known as "Peay's Folly," because observers felt it was foolish to build such a sizeable house and especially one so far from the railroad.

But the young bride was thrilled over the plantation home as she watched the bridge, Italian shoemaker who provided shoes from "expans length."

A task which Mrs. Peay loved

to do some years before

it had been known as "Peay's Folly," because observers felt it was foolish to build such a sizeable house and especially one so far from the railroad.

But the young bride was thrilled over the plantation home as she watched the bridge, Italian shoemaker who provided shoes from "expans length."

A task which Mrs. Peay loved

to do some years before

it had been known as "Peay's Folly," because observers felt it was foolish to build such a sizeable house and especially one so far from the railroad.

But the young bride was thrilled over the plantation home as she watched the bridge, Italian shoemaker who provided shoes from "expans length."

A task which Mrs. Peay loved

to do some years before

it had been known as "Peay's Folly," because observers felt it was foolish to build such a sizeable house and especially one so far from the railroad.

But the young bride was thrilled over the plantation home as she watched the bridge, Italian shoemaker who provided shoes from "expans length."

A task which Mrs. Peay loved

to do some years before

it had been known as "Peay's Folly," because observers felt it was foolish to build such a sizeable house and especially one so far from the railroad.

But the young bride was thrilled over the plantation home as she watched the bridge, Italian shoemaker who provided shoes from "expans length."

A task which Mrs. Peay loved

to do some years before

it had been known as "Peay's Folly," because observers felt it was foolish to build such a sizeable house and especially one so far from the railroad.

But the young bride was thrilled over the plantation home as she watched the bridge, Italian shoemaker who provided shoes from "expans length."

A task which Mrs. Peay loved

to do some years before

it had been known as "Peay's Folly," because observers felt it was foolish to build such a sizeable house and especially one so far from the railroad.

But the young bride was thrilled over the plantation home as she watched the bridge, Italian shoemaker who provided shoes from "expans length."

A task which Mrs. Peay loved

to do some years before

it had been known as "Peay's Folly," because observers felt it was foolish to build such a sizeable house and especially one so far from the railroad.

But the young bride was thrilled over the plantation home as she watched the bridge, Italian shoemaker who provided shoes from "expans length."

A task which Mrs. Peay loved

to do some years before

it had been known as "Peay's Folly," because observers felt it was foolish to build such a sizeable house and especially one so far from the railroad.

But the young bride was thrilled over the plantation home as she watched the bridge, Italian shoemaker who provided shoes from "expans length."

A task which Mrs. Peay loved

to do some years before

it had been known as "Peay's Folly," because observers felt it was foolish to build such a sizeable house and especially one so far from the railroad.

But the young bride was thrilled over the plantation home as she watched the bridge, Italian shoemaker who provided shoes from "expans length."

A task which Mrs. Peay loved

to do some years before

it had been known as "Peay's Folly," because observers felt it was foolish to build such a sizeable house and especially one so far from the railroad.

But the young bride was thrilled over the plantation home as she watched the bridge, Italian shoemaker who provided shoes from "expans length."

A task which Mrs. Peay loved

to do some years before

it had been known as "Peay's Folly," because observers felt it was foolish to build such a sizeable house and especially one so far from the railroad.

But the young bride was thrilled over the plantation home as she watched the bridge, Italian shoemaker who provided shoes from "expans length."

A task which Mrs. Peay loved

to do some years before

it had been known as "Peay's Folly," because observers felt it was foolish to build such a sizeable house and especially one so far from the railroad.

But the young bride was thrilled over the plantation home as she watched the bridge, Italian shoemaker who provided shoes from "expans length."

A task which Mrs. Peay loved

to do some years before

it had been known as "Peay's Folly," because observers felt it was foolish to build such a sizeable house and especially one so far from the railroad.

But the young bride was thrilled over the plantation home as she watched the bridge, Italian shoemaker who provided shoes from "expans length."

A task which Mrs. Peay loved

to do some years before

it had been known as "Peay's Folly," because observers felt it was foolish to build such a sizeable house and especially one so far from the railroad.

But the young bride was thrilled over the plantation home as she watched the bridge, Italian shoemaker who provided shoes from "expans length."

A task which Mrs. Peay loved

to do some years before

it had been known as "Peay's Folly," because observers felt it was foolish to build such a sizeable house and especially one so far from the railroad.

But the young bride was thrilled over the plantation home as she watched the bridge, Italian shoemaker who provided shoes from "expans length."

A task which Mrs. Peay loved

to do some years before

it had been known as "Peay's Folly," because observers felt it was foolish to build such a sizeable house and especially one so far from the railroad.

But the young bride was thrilled over the plantation home as she watched the bridge, Italian shoemaker who provided shoes from "expans length."

A task which Mrs. Peay loved

to do some years before

it had been known as "Peay's Folly," because observers felt it was foolish to build such a sizeable house and especially one so far from the railroad.

But the young bride was thrilled over the plantation home as she watched the bridge, Italian shoemaker who provided shoes from "expans length."

A task which Mrs. Peay loved

to do some years before

it had been known as "Peay's Folly," because observers felt it was foolish to build such a sizeable house and especially one so far from the railroad.

But the young bride was thrilled over the plantation home as she watched the bridge, Italian shoemaker who provided shoes from "expans length."

A task which Mrs. Peay loved

to do some years before

it had been known as "Peay's Folly," because observers felt it was foolish to build such a sizeable house and especially one so far from the railroad.

But the young bride was thrilled over the plantation home as she watched the bridge, Italian shoemaker who provided shoes from "expans length."

A task which Mrs. Peay loved

to do some years before

it had been known as "Peay's Folly," because observers felt it was foolish to build such a sizeable house and especially one so far from the railroad.

But the young bride was thrilled over the plantation home as she watched the bridge, Italian shoemaker who provided shoes from "expans length."

A task which Mrs. Peay loved

to do some years before

it had been known as "Peay's Folly," because observers felt it was foolish to build such a sizeable house and especially one so far from the railroad.

But the young bride was thrilled over the plantation home as she watched the bridge, Italian shoemaker who provided shoes from "expans length."

A task which Mrs. Peay loved

to do some years before

it had been known as "Peay's Folly," because observers felt it was foolish to build such a sizeable house and especially one so far from the railroad.

But the young bride was thrilled over the plantation home as she watched the bridge, Italian shoemaker who provided shoes from "expans length."

A task which Mrs. Peay loved

to do some years before

it had been known as "Peay's Folly," because observers felt it was foolish to build such a sizeable house and especially one so far from the railroad.

But the young bride was thrilled over the plantation home as she watched the bridge, Italian shoemaker who provided shoes from "expans length."

A task which Mrs. Peay loved

to do some years before

it had been known as "Peay's Folly," because observers felt it was foolish to build such a sizeable house and especially one so far from the railroad.

But the young bride was thrilled over the plantation home as she watched the bridge, Italian shoemaker who provided shoes from "expans length."

A task which Mrs. Peay loved

to do some years before

it had been known as "Peay's Folly," because observers felt it was foolish to build such a sizeable house and especially one so far from the railroad.

But the young bride was thrilled over the plantation home as she watched the bridge, Italian shoemaker who provided shoes from "expans length."

A task which Mrs. Peay loved

to do some years before

it had been known as "Peay's Folly," because observers felt it was foolish to build such a sizeable house and especially one so far from the railroad.

But the young bride was thrilled over the plantation home as she watched the bridge, Italian shoemaker who provided shoes from "expans length."

A task which Mrs. Peay loved

to do some years before

it had been known as "Peay's Folly," because observers felt it was foolish to build such a sizeable house and especially one so far from the railroad.

But the young bride was thrilled over the plantation home as she watched the bridge, Italian shoemaker who provided shoes from "expans length."

A task which Mrs. Peay loved

to do some years before

it had been known as "Peay's Folly," because observers felt it was foolish to build such a sizeable house and especially one so far from the railroad.

But the young bride was thrilled over the plantation home as she watched the bridge, Italian shoemaker who provided shoes from "expans length."

A task which Mrs. Peay loved

to do some years before

it had been known as "Peay's Folly," because observers felt it was foolish to build such a sizeable house and especially one so far from the railroad.

But the young bride was thrilled over the plantation home as she watched the bridge, Italian shoemaker who provided shoes from "expans length."

A task which Mrs. Peay loved

to do some years before

it had been known as "Peay's Folly," because observers felt it was foolish to build such a sizeable house and especially one so far from the railroad.

But the young bride was thrilled over the plantation home as she watched the bridge, Italian shoemaker who provided shoes from "expans length."

A task which Mrs. Peay loved

to do some years before

it had been known as "Peay's Folly," because observers felt it was foolish to build such a sizeable house and especially one so far from the railroad.

But the young bride was thrilled over the plantation home as she watched the bridge, Italian shoemaker who provided shoes from "expans length."

A task which Mrs. Peay loved

to do some years before

it had been known as "Peay's Folly," because observers felt it was foolish to build such a sizeable house and especially one so far from the railroad.

But the young bride was thrilled over the plantation home as she watched the bridge, Italian shoemaker who provided shoes from "expans length."

A task which Mrs. Peay loved

to do some years before

it had been known as "Peay's Folly," because observers felt it was foolish to build such a sizeable house and especially one so far from the railroad.

But the young bride was thrilled over the plantation home as she watched the bridge, Italian shoemaker who provided shoes from "expans length."

A task which Mrs. Peay loved

to do some years before

it had been known as "Peay's Folly," because observers felt it was foolish to build such a sizeable house and especially one so far from the railroad.

But the young bride was thrilled over the plantation home as she watched the bridge, Italian shoemaker who provided shoes from "expans length."

A task which Mrs. Peay loved

to do some years before

it had been known as "Peay's Folly," because observers felt it was foolish to build such a sizeable house and especially one so far from the railroad.

But the young bride was thrilled over the plantation home as she watched the bridge, Italian shoemaker who provided shoes from "expans length."

A task which Mrs. Peay loved

to do some years before

it had been known as "Peay's Folly," because observers felt it was foolish to build such a sizeable house and especially one so far from the railroad.

But the young bride was thrilled over the plantation home as she watched the bridge, Italian shoemaker who provided shoes from "expans length."

A task which Mrs. Peay loved

to do some years before

it had been known as "Peay's Folly," because observers felt it was foolish to build such a sizeable house and especially one so far from the railroad.

But the young bride was thrilled over the plantation home as she watched the bridge, Italian shoemaker who provided shoes from "expans length."

A task which Mrs. Peay loved

to do some years before

it had been known as "Peay's Folly," because observers felt it was foolish to build such a sizeable house and especially one so far from the railroad.

But the young bride was thrilled over the plantation home as she watched the bridge, Italian shoemaker who provided shoes from "expans length."

A task which Mrs. Peay loved

to do some years before

it had been known as "Peay's Folly," because observers felt it was foolish to build such a sizeable house and especially one so far from the railroad.

But the young bride was thrilled over the plantation home as she watched the bridge, Italian shoemaker who provided shoes from "expans length."

A task which Mrs. Peay loved

to do some years before

it had been known as "Peay's Folly," because observers felt it was foolish to build such a sizeable house and especially one so far from the railroad.

But the young bride was thrilled over the plantation home as she watched the bridge, Italian shoemaker who provided shoes from "expans length."

A task which Mrs. Peay loved

to do some years before

it had been known as "Peay's Folly," because observers felt it was foolish to build such a sizeable house and especially one so far from the railroad.

But the young bride was thrilled over the plantation home as she watched the bridge, Italian shoemaker who provided shoes from "expans length."

A task which Mrs. Peay loved</