Pelham,
Thank you. One of the graves most likely William Winn's.
Thoughts.

William Winn died in 1813 while on business in Charleston, South Carolina. He is buried next to his brother John's wife, Dorothea Wright in Winnsboro, South Carolina.

Dear Mr. Guenther,

I apologize if I misled you about the Winn house. I thought you were talking about the house in Winnsboro called Wynne Dee. It (Wynne Dee) was a house built by a Bratton son-in-law of Richard Winn for his (Wm. Bratton's) wife who was a Winn. I didn't know you were speaking of a house in Virginia. The photo you sent it lovely and we will document it in the Winn files as being the home of Minor---was this Minor the father of Richard, John, and Minor who came to Winnsboro?

Remind me again of the pictures I was to send you. I think they were of the site where the Winn descendants were said to be buried on Col. John Winn's land grant property on Little River by Bell's Bridge. Here they are along with a topographical map showing the location. There is only one stone left in the grave and it was a large slab set up on supporting blocks of granite like a sepulcher. I was with the archaeological team when we dug into the side where a bit of void was showing under the slab. We could find no inscriptions on either side of the slab. It was probably a half ton of stone, so we had to view it from the hole with a flashlight and couldn't detect names or writing. However I believe John's will mentioned the cemetery and the DAR and WPA officials documented the location of the site back in the 1930s and 1940s before it was demolished by careless logging operations.

Eddie,

The lady there said she had some pictures for me and that his house in Virginia wasn't built by Minor Winn. Can you ask her to send me a picture and also did Minor live in this house even if he didn't build it.

Thanks Eddie. I really enjoyed my time with the team there. My wife was out waiting on me or you know I would have stayed all day.

I sure would appreciate anything you may find on my family.

Enjoyed Winnsboro.
