CHESTER -- Pris Wright wasn't selling.

Her husband, Watson, died in 2005, leaving Pris in charge of the funeral home she married into. The business, which dates back to 1911, had been owned by the Wright family since 1945.

But Pris Wright's two grown children had moved away and weren't taking over the funeral home. Her husband told her before he died that she should sell the business, which often pulled her away at a moment's notice and forced her to stay near a telephone.
