

A BRILLIANT WEDDING

On the evening of Wednesday, the 15th inst. a few of the friends and relatives of Dr. and Mrs. J. D. Cureton assembled at their residence in Pickens to witness the marriage of their daughter, Miss Katie, to Mr. Robert E. Yongue of Fairfield. Promptly at the appointed hour, the bridal party made their appearance. The first couple, Mr. Charley H. Douglas, of Albion, Fairfield County, and Miss Anna Cureton, of Greenville, who took their place to the right in front of the minister. Next came Mr. Thos. L. Estes, of Fairfield and Miss Clandia Cureton of Easley who stood to the left in front of the minister, when Rev. A. W. Walker, of Westminister, in the solemn and impressive ceremony of the Methodist Church, pronounced them husband and wife. The bride and bridesmaids were beautifully and tastefully attired in traveling suits, and the gentlemen wore the regulation Prince Alberts.

Before the hearty congratulations showered upon the young and beautiful bride had ceased, the entire party were summoned to the dining room to enjoy a truly royal wedding feast. The tables, laden as it was, with all the delicacies the appetite could crave, was arranged with faultless taste. In the center of table was the bridal cake, the wonder and admiration of all. It was an inverted crescent, having upon its apex Hymen's alter, on which stood a beautiful and lovely bride in miniature, all of which was arched over with silver bands studded with stars and crystals made of candy. These sparkled like diamonds in the glow of the wax candles which stood on the four corners of the basement. It was an elegant and beautiful feast, and thoroughly enjoyed by all present. The only unpleasant thing about the whole affair was, it had to break up. About ten o'clock P.M. the bridal party left for Easley to take the midnight train for their home.

Many kind wishes for her happiness went with the bride to her new home. The editors present seemed to appreciate the occasion very highly, but it is saft to say the doctors, merchants and lawyer enjoyed themselves as well.
