

"23 cemeteries provide FJ history, mystery"

By Spc. Carol Cole
Leader Staff

To most people who come through its gates, Fort Jackson has always been a military installation. For those families who have been in Columbia for many generations however, the land that makes up Fort Jackson has a deeper meaning that goes back hundreds of years.

Twenty-three cemeteries dot the landscape of Fort Jackson. Some are located in populated areas of the installation, while others are scattered throughout training areas and range impact areas.

"Most of our cemeteries are family plots, but others were run by church groups or local communities," said Judy Matteson, curator of the Fort Jackson museum. "They tell a very important part of the post's history."

Most of the cemeteries were established before the Army bought the land they were on.

Each belonged to a specific family or a neighborhood church group. Even though the U. S. Army bought the cemeteries, family members may still come to view the stones.

"Those who wish to come view the cemeteries can call the museum to coordinate a visit to post," said Matteson. "A directory is also available here for anyone researching to find out if they have any family members buried here."

Even visits to cemeteries located in impact area may be scheduled, but those will be scheduled through the museum at a lower priority to training units, Matteson added.

Over the years, Location of family plots has become more and more difficult. Some cemeteries have been relocated to bigger cemeteries off post, and others have been renamed.

Also limiting access to the cemetery sites is the deterioration of the stones making them untraceable, and the lack of accessibility for upkeep of the land around them.

The Fort Jackson Directorate of Logistics and Engineering, Maintenance Services Division maintains cemeteries closer to the more populated areas of the post.

"General grounds maintenance is accomplished annually and includes such services as grass mowing, trimming of trees and shrubs, and the removal of leaves, limbs, paper and other debris," said Thomas Peel, real property officer for DLE. "Care is taken to prevent damage to existing structures, and are repaired and replaced as needed."

Groups such as the Boy Scouts of America or the Sons of the Confederate Veterans also come on post periodically to do maintenance on the cemeteries.

In addition to maintenance of the grounds and stones, DLE is also responsible for processing burial requests.

"Burial on the installation is not considered an automatic right," said Peel. "Each request is treated on a case-by-case basis. Army policy puts restrictions on who has burial rights, and qualifying families who wish to bury family members must submit special documentation and a formal letter to DLE."

For more details, contact Peel at 751-7261. With Department of the Army policies for burial so restrictive, permission for burial on an installation is rarely given. To visit any Fort Jackson cemetery, contact the Post Museum at 751-7419. Hours of Operation are Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. until 4 p.m.
