FURMAN INSTITUTION

The FURMAN INSTITUTION was chartered and established in 1825. This was an academical school and a theological seminary for the education of youth sponsored by the Baptist of South Carolina. Doctor James Furman, the spiritual father of the school, was the son of Richard Furman who came to South Carolina as a surveyor before the Revolutionary War from New England. The family was interested in education. Their school was first opened in Edgefield, South Carolina, in 1827 but due to financial difficulties and other reasons it was moved to the High Hills of the Santee at Statesburg. It operated there for a few years and was moved again, this time to Fairfield County.

After the Reverend Doctor Jonathan Davis of Fairfield County was made Chairman of the Board of Trustees a tract of land consisting of 557 acres was purchased in his county and the school was opened there. The location was a little more than three miles west of Winnsboro. At first a frame building of thirty by one hundred and twenty feet was built to house the students, classrooms, and library. This was in 1837. In May of the same year the building and its contents were destroyed by fire. One student, a Mr. Goddard of Georgetown, South Carolina, perished in the flames.

The school was operated on the manual labor plan. Each student worked a task in the field every day to help defray his expenses.

In 1838 two more buildings were erected. One was of three stories and was built of brick. This was used for an administration building, classrooms, and chapel. It still stands atop a high, barren hill, vacant and weather-beaten, like a gaunt ghost of the past. The second building was also of brick construction. It is a rather attractive, spacious, two story structure with a one story piazza across the front. It was used as a residence for the faculty. Now it is the home of the Timms family who have lived here for many years.

Besides the two brick buildings there were a dozen or more small barracks buildings eighteen by sixteen feet in which the students lived.

During the years that the school remained in Fairfield it had a struggle to remain in operation. In a short while the manual labor department proved to be a failure. This was closed in 1841. The classical school dragged on for some time longer but was finally forced to close for a while; then it was reopened. The department of Theology, however, continued to flourish and grew to be the best school of its kind in the entire South.

In spite of the progress made in the Seminary the Baptists raised more funds and decided to move the school again. In 1851 it was taken to Greenville, South Carolina. The new Furman planned to offer courses in law and medicine and was rechartered as Furman University. It has grown now to be one of the largest and most popular institutions of learning in the state. Several years ago the campus was moved again; this last time from the City of Greenville to a beautiful site at the foot of the mountains a few miles west of the city.
